Let us not ignore the personal commitment many officers have made over the last several years, confronting the challenges to build broken relationships in our communities.”

	From https://www.clarkcountytoday.com/news/election-2020-49th-legislative-district-house-of-representatives-position-2/ Answer to: Do you think there needs to be any reform in policing in Washington? If so, what legislation would you propose? If not, please give your reasons. "I believe there needs to be reform in policing," Stonier said. "But I think we're fortunate here in Southwest Washington, the policy requests that have been put forward, are actually in place here in Vancouver, by our police department. We know that our police department here has a standard for training and accountability that's higher than many others in the state. I think the rest of the state can look to the Vancouver Police Department for some guidance on not only on what to do right, and how to do it well, but also on how to come to the community about what they know they can improve on. In my conversations with law enforcement, I've been incredibly thankful for the leadership that we've seen here."
